Log:

The Questors decide to exact vengeance on Mirara for taking the divining rod, so they teleport to Cuvet, the capital of Hisar.

The party meets Cedric, the main guard. They talk to the Divine Soul who has a punchable face.

He insults Inara, taking her off the team. He dismisses the party.

Sigmund and Inara scry the divining rod. They see a dark room with Unnar, Abraxas, a high priestess storm giantess shrunk to human size, and other shadowy forms who defy scrying. They see where the divining rod is stored in a secure vault within the dungeon level of the acropolis.

Pipkin and Nigel make friends with Cedric, and tell him about how the Divine Soul is in league with these monsters. Inara asks for his help. Ping shows Cedric the head of the slain mind flayer, and he agrees to help.

The next day, Cedric takes the Questors down to the dungeon level and leaves them where they can access the vault that holds the divining rod.

They find a room with four dragon statues. Red, green, Bronze and platinum. Inara spins the platinum dragon to face the far doors, but the left door won't budge. Pipkin pushes harder, which sets off a poison gas trap from the green dragon. Only by removing the gemstone eyes of the green dragon can they stop the trap. Pipkin forces the door further open.

Inside there are treasures as well as a large statue of the Divine Soul. Nigel sneaks in and locates the rod, but decides to attack the statue identifying it as the golem Cedric had mentioned. Inara banishes the construct twice, allowing the Questors to quickly loot the vault and teleport back to Robur Veritas to safety.
