The Pirate Bastards leave Tortuga, headed for Port au Prince to look for potential targets. The Pirate Bastards find a stowaway on board named Pete Bollerz. Pete scrapes and becomes subservient to Red, accepting beatings and weighing in on what the crew should do next.

The Pirate Bastards come to see the Brigandine, a Brigantine ship coming out of Port au Prince toward England. Despite flying an English flag, the Pirate Bastards come to realize it is in fact a French ship. Red shoots the ship several times with cannon fire, and the Bastards eventually board after shooting most of the French marines dead.

They find that the ship was commandeered to travel back to France to take Esme LaBlanc away from Port au Prince. The Pirates threaten the crew looking for volunteers. Many of the crew actually hate Lady Esme. To prove their loyalty, she is slain several times before being allowed to go into that final death. Many of the crew don't make the cut and are forced to walk the plank. Two are chosen to join, a pirate named Barrels and an odd Frenchman named Jacques Feratu.

The Pirate Bastards sail into Docketown of Tortuga and try to sell the Brigantine named the Brigandine. They meet the dockmaster who offers them a deal. Red shoots the dockmaster, and the Pirates row away with his cash. Others in Tortuga recognize Red as "Dirty Andrew Smith" and curse him, lowering his status (or perhaps heightening) because of his betrayal. The Pirate Bastards immediately set sail west for Port Royal.

Along the way, they run into a derelict ship, the Crimson Tempest. It has mostly been shot up and looted. They find crates with bones of sea monsters. They bring those aboard, but the next morning they awaken feeling slightly ill.

They sail toward Port Royal but run into La Baguette, a French warship captained by the legendary Etienne LaBlanc. Curly manages to drive the Fiancee fast enough to escape, and points the Fiancee toward Santo-Domingo.

Along the way to Santo-Domingo, the Pirate Bastards hear a commotion below decks. Fingers has gotten into a scuffle with Samuel and Edward over gambling money. Fingers kills Samuel in a duel. Fingers kills Edward but he's raised by Mr. Diaz. Jacque is very fond of Mr. Diaz.
